[00:00:07.18] Is that we do what probably what a lot of us do already and play around with MySpace. Basically I was looking over the ideas that the various speakers are going to be presenting, and one of them caught my eye. It was about how MySpace is changing youth composition.

[00:00:23.04] So I propose that we examine that. And we talk to the speaker, we talk to the people involved. And there's a whole bunch of speakers that mention MySpace as part of their presentations, so I'm sure there's more than enough people to talk to about how MySpace is affecting how students write, how students perceive things, how students communicate with other students, that kind of thing.

[00:00:42.30] And we present that information, perhaps in the same form, perhaps as a MySpace, because it brings in text, it brings in images, it brings in video. And all those things can be combined in a unique way in which reinforces the purpose of examining online communities, online composition. And especially because we're the quote/unquote "youth" that's using the stuff, it's applicable, I guess.

[00:01:09.46] So that's my idea. It's pretty simple.
