In your opinion, is it harder to think critically than to base your arguments on how you feel about a topic? Why or why not? What are the advantages of finding answers based on your feelings? What about those that are based on critical thinking? How might you use both approaches in seeking answers?