

Macmillan | Phishing

GIRL 1: Did you guys see that cat video that went viral on YouTube today?

BOY: No. What was it?

GIRL 1: You've got to watch. It's so funny. Oh my god. It's supposed to rain all weekend. My roommates and I were supposed to have a barbecue That's so annoying.

GIRL 2: Maybe you can just do it next weekend.

GIRL 1: Whoa, that's weird. I just got an urgent email from my bank saying there's suspicious activity on my credit card. There's an attachment here that shows the suspicious activity. I should probably download that.

GIRL 2: No.

BOY: Don't do that.

GIRL 2: Don't do that.

GIRL 1: Whoa, what are you doing?

BOY: Let me see this message.

GIRL 2: This looks super fishy.

BOY: Yeah, there's no company logo, no date, it's just text. If this were a real urgent message, the bank would definitely have their company branding somewhere in the email.

GIRL 2: Look at the email address. It's not even a name or a word, it's just numbers.

GIRL 1: Oh, you guys think this is a scam?

BOY: Definitely.

GIRL 2: Totally.

BOY: Yeah, I've gotten an email like this before. It's just someone trying to steal your information by making you download that attachment.

GIRL 2: You didn't download it did you?

GIRL 1: I did. What happens now? I don't

BOY: Know. Wait and see, I guess.