Since I have been only eight years old, I have dream of becoming a professional baseball player. Trying to develop the skill of a professional player has been both physically and mentally challenging. One of the greatest difficulties that I have face is fear. When I become the pitcher on my high school team, I was under a lot of pressure; my teammates, coach, and all the students at my school depended on me to win games. The thought of losing terrify me. Before a few games in my first season, I have put so much pressure on myself to win and to be a good leader that I freezed. In time, though, I learn to manage my stress and to make the fear work in my favor. By the time I was a senior, I was transforming the fear into energy that helped me stay alert and quick. Although I know I will have many more challenges to face in pursuit of my dream, I am confident that someday I succeed.
